Building the New Healthcare Workforce

Healthcare is undergoing an historic transformation that’s producing the greatest impact on the healthcare workforce and clinical management. The biggest catalyst for change is the Affordable Care Act, which will result in the influx of millions of newly covered patients.

Hospitals and health systems face additional challenges, including:

- An aging population needing increased care for chronic conditions
- Shortages of qualified clinicians
- Changes in care delivery models
- A trend towards value-based initiatives
- A multiplicity of technological advancements.

At the same time, hospitals and health systems face pressures to cut costs, improve quality and expand access to care.

These and other changes are creating the need for new types of healthcare workers, along with improved engagement and management of the healthcare workforce.

As a result, AMN Healthcare, the innovator of healthcare workforce solutions, has created The Center for the Advancement of Healthcare Professionals to build the future workforce through high-quality training and education programs customized to each healthcare system’s needs.

The Center works in conjunction with health systems to develop workforce solutions, education, and research to ensure effective planning and management designed to satisfy unmet workforce needs, contain costs, relieve management burdens, and achieve person-centered care mandates under today’s new realities of healthcare.

Healthcare Futures: Customized Workforce Development

The Healthcare Futures program accommodates the fast-moving changes in healthcare today that are altering workforce needs. and fill them through a flexible program of learning, mentoring, assessment, certification and placement.
